Exploring Holland and Belgium expedition

_National Geographic Explorer_ navigates up the Thames with the pageantry of modern and historic London displayed along its banks. Stand on deck late into the evening as London’s iconic LED-lit Tower Bridge comes into view.

Want to sail back down the Thames? Stay aboard _National Geographic Explorer_ and discover a side of the British and Irish Isles known to few by combining expeditions. For details see inside back cover and visit our website.
style means special access, uncommon experiences and a grand finale.

We will have a water-level view of the most famous bridge in the world—a grand finale to our voyage.
Among the surprising and uncommon delights you’ll experience is a historic first: when National Geographic Explorer berths in the historic old town of Harlingen, it will be the first expedition ship ever to do so. And by special permission, you’ll venture into Harlingen’s center aboard Zodiacs and cruise its canals before attending a special concert performance at the Grote Kerk church on an organ dating back to 1775. Here in the Friesland region, we’ll explore the wildly beautiful Frisian Islands, a chain of barrier islands with white-sand beaches, coniferous forests, and wide and high sand dunes. The sea is integral to the culture and history here, and we’ll discover the birdlife-rich Waddenzee, a UNESCO World Heritage site that is a stretch of intertidal land constantly shifting from landscape to seascape—a crucial habitat for more than 10,000 species of plants and animals and 12 million migratory birds. Nearby Den Helder is home to one of the country’s iconic tulip fields—a photo op not to be missed—the pastoral side to a more cultured pleasure available to us in Amsterdam.

Discover a hidden Holland amid the highlights of the Low Countries

Dating from the 17th century, the ancient and historic harbor of Harlingen has been a center for traditional Dutch sailing barges, a number of which are usually moored at the quay.
A curated exploration of Amsterdam makes the most of your time

Continuing the expedition spirit of our voyage, our introduction to this city will be aboard local boats as we weave our way through its heart. The Rijksmuseum houses the world’s largest collection of Dutch masters. Newly reopened after a nine-year, $500 million renovation, it is arguably the foremost destination now in Europe. You’ll have a guided overview for an insider’s view. Our step back into history continues—at a private dinner at the West India House. The former headquarters of the Dutch West India Company, it was here that the Dutch decided to establish the colony New Amsterdam on the island of Manhattan. A statue of New Amsterdam’s first commander, Peter Stuyvesant, resides in the courtyard, and a similar statue of the pegged-leg gent stands 3,646 miles away in the U.S. on his family’s former land—New York’s Gramercy Park neighborhood. Flower lovers will have the option to visit the world-famous Keukenhof flower show, where more than seven million tulips, daffodils, and hyacinths fill 80 acres of bulb fields.
Find Medieval magic in Brugge & Gent

Once the strategic crossroads of the northern Hanseatic League, Brugge is a city that has retained all the charm of its origins. To get lost amid the compact city center’s streets is to explore a cherished time capsule, with the medieval caught inside like a fly in amber. It’s poetry in bricks and mortar, laid down centuries ago, best explored leisurely on foot, or via its network of canals with their lovely, low-arched bridges. The medieval city of Gent is a showcase of Flemish wealth, with its ornate houses and cathedrals, where lively street markets flourish as they have for ages. You’ll visit St. Bavo Cathedral, home to the famous series of paintings “The Adoration of the Mystic Lamb” by Jan Van Eyck—seeing it undergo restoration, with one panel removed at a time, is a fascinating insider’s look at classical art meeting modernity. At Belga Queen, a 13th-century landmark building converted into a modern brasserie, we’ll enjoy a special lunch—a gastronomic exploration of the region’s specialties.

Explore Antwerp

As the influence of Brugge declined, the city of Antwerp flourished, and the 15th-century trading houses and 16th-century guild houses still stand as a testament to its status as the global powerhouse of its era. Gain a deep understanding of these forces by exploring it with your expedition historians. See the work of Dutch Masters, including a visit to the must-see Rubenshuis, the former home and studio of Peter Paul Rubens. Together with our voyage art historian you’ll see the masterpieces and understand the life of the master who created them. And, of course, one of the best ways to enjoy a European city is to relax at a sidewalk café, sampling the region’s specialties: Belgian waffles, mussels and beer brewed in abbeys by Trappist monks, and Belgium’s famed chocolate.

NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC

NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC PHOTOGRAPHERS ON BOARD

Sisse Brimberg and Cotton Coulson have collectively photographed more than 50 stories for National Geographic and National Geographic Traveler magazines. They have spent most of their careers working in Europe, and have been awarded prizes by Pictures of the Year International, the National Press Photographers Association and Communication Arts.
Amazing times are to be had when one leaves the beaten track and ventures further afield. Few itineraries lead one down a trail slipping between the mud flats of the Waddenzee, following narrow and winding channels where most large vessels fear to go. It is quite possible only a minority outside of the European World realize that a treasure nestles here at the edge of the sea.

One wonders how a huge intertidal system can exist appearing undisturbed and yet so touched by the hand of man. They say “God created the earth but the Dutch created Holland” and in a sense that may be so but where we were today, nature and man seem to cooperate well with each other.

Barrier islands are special. The sands move with the tides and the winds. Plucked from far lands, rocky fragments find their way down tumbling grades or hop and jump through slow meanders. Slapped by the opposing sea and pulsing tides they find shelter in eddies until they are worn away again in a never-ending cycle where islands appear to “march” from one place to another.

Texel is the westernmost in an island chain that extends from Denmark to The Netherlands. Once nothing more than a glacial moraine behind which sand dunes grew, it is now an inviting blend of wildlife habitats and agricultural land. The harbor town of Oudeschilde was our gateway to explorations for the morning. Borne ashore by Zodiac we spread out in two directions to explore the island. Fresh-water ponds and canals hid behind man-made dikes, their shores hosting myriads of nesting birds and passing migrants too. Newborn lambs snuggled close to their mothers in verdant green pastures. Windmills pumped the water from the sea or demonstrated grinding grain to flour. Some chose to explore the maritime history of the island or examine the artifacts delivered by the sea. Bird-watchers lost themselves in the diversity and many wished to stay or to return in the not-too-distant future.

A short hop across the channel the port of Den Helder, only slightly more urban, hosted our vessel. Here again we found ourselves drawn by either the hand of man or the plethora of avian creatures. The tulip fields are nearly bare of blossoms now as bulb production requires a timely beheading of the flowers but here and there a flush of red or yellow could be seen and much was learned of the immense commercial operations. Nature lovers were overwhelmed by thousands of shorebirds drifting in segregated flocks along the shore and by passerines singing cheerfully in a nearby forest.

Tomorrow the city awaits us but for tonight and into the future we will dream of the treasures of the place at the edge of the sea.

— Karen Copeland, naturalist
