FIRST-EVER AND EXCLUSIVE ACCESS TO STATEN ISLAND

The following report, filed by naturalist Bud Lehnhausen, details the results of meetings between Lindblad Expeditions staff and officials regarding Staten Island. We share this excerpt to convey how truly ground-breaking the discovery opportunity is for guests on our ROUNDED THE CAPE: CHILEAN PATAGONIA & ARGENTINA’S STATEN ISLAND expedition.

Our long interest in Staten Island, with repeated requests and sincere negotiations, has resulted in what will be an extremely significant event for the province of Tierra del Fuego and Argentina. Staten Island has become a new Provincial Reserve, and Lindblad Expeditions will be the very first operator to visit the island since that designation. Any vessel going to or from the Malvinas Islands/Falkland Islands passes by the island, but none has been given permission to visit—until now.

Lindblad Expeditions being awarded the first official permit to this new Provincial Reserve is undoubtedly a great honor. Lindblad Expeditions’ experience in other areas of the world, and the company’s stance with environmental ethics has been an important factor in granting permission. There has also been a lot of emphasis on the National Geographic Explorer, her officers, and the technology available for navigation in challenging situations. During two of those meetings our experienced Captains, Skog and Krueiss, spoke with their Argentine Navy colleagues to explain how we operate in remote places, how we contribute to the collective knowledge of these places, and how committed we are to the politics and planning of best operational practices in Antarctica. Staten Island is known for the shipwrecks that have occurred over the centuries.

As part of this permission, we have also discussed what we could do to help them begin the process of making visits to the island sustainable for the future. Their greatest desire is to learn how to manage visitors on the island. In recent meetings naturalists Eduardo Shaw and Lucho Verdesoto presented Lindblad’s history of helping to develop responsible tourism at various destinations, including the Galápagos, and impressed them greatly. The authorities have little or no knowledge of how visitors can be managed on a site like Staten Island. So far, they have been looking primarily at the management plan for South Georgia and the IAATO guidelines, which Lindblad was instrumental in developing. The Staten Island authorities would welcome our advice and assistance.
in setting up plans to administer and manage Staten Island Provincial Reserve, including tourism activities.

One of the amazing potentials for this kind of contribution is in the undersea realm. As far as the managers know, no one has conducted dives around the island. Basic knowledge of what marine life exists under the surface is completely lacking, and there are literally dozens of shipwrecks around the island, some of which are a few hundred years old, and very few have been explored. Our Undersea Specialist could provide the park with the beginnings of some baseline surveys of a few areas. There are also opportunities for Bob Pitman and John Durban (a research team who has frequently traveled aboard NG Explorer in Antarctica, sharing their killer whale research with guests) to tag the Type A killer whales sighted around the island, perhaps for a National Geographic cover story.

The landscape looks remarkable—with stunning, quite diverse scenery, easily one of the most spectacular islands anywhere. It is not often that an opportunity such as this presents itself. Much of the geography of the world has become familiar and much visited. It is becoming rarer and more difficult to find a location where an organization is given the chance to take part in developing management plans, including visitor procedures and basic research, and at the same time assist in restoration of the natural environment. In addition, these negotiations have led to us being able to take the first visitors to a recently-established Provincial Reserve.
LAST CHANCE TO TAKE ONE OF THESE 5 SOUTH PACIFIC VOYAGES—HERE’S WHY:

In 2016 we have entirely new plans for the National Geographic Orion, making 2015 the year to join us for a South Pacific expedition. Especially with savings like these and exclusive experiences you’ll remember for the rest of your life.

On March 18, 2015, the UK government designated the world’s largest contiguous marine reserve encompassing the remote Pitcairn Islands, totaling 322,000 square miles. Take our TAHITI TO EASTER ISLAND expedition and you’ll be among the first to visit what Dr. Enric Sala, head of the National Geographic Pristine Seas project, calls “some of the cleanest waters in the world,” and experience some of the area’s thousands of species of marine mammals, seabirds and fish, many of which are endemic to the region. You’ll share the adventure with our newly announced Global Perspectives guest speaker Paul Rose—an expedition leader for National Geographic’s Pristine Seas. And, in addition to encountering the haunting moai, you’ll spend an extra hotel night on Easter Island as our guest, included in the itinerary.

Board National Geographic Orion on any of the five beautifully orchestrated, diverse adventures we’ve designed for you, and experience the finest snorkeling, diving, or glass-bottom Zodiac observing anywhere on the planet—as we explore legendary spots like Truk (Chuuk) Lagoon with its sunken WWII remnants; one of the top wreck dives, the S.S. President Coolidge; Millennium Atoll, another National Geographic Pristine Seas site; the Cook Islands, and many more premier locations.
